How to lead when not in charge

On 17th September 12.30 p.m. to 2.00pm via Zoom

This is a question I often ask people when I deliver Leadership and Management training. There is a common belief that you cannot lead unless you are in charge of the organisation in which you work – that you must be a senior partner, a managing director or the owner of a legal business. This is simply not true.

I find it prompts lawyers, particularly junior ones, to look again at the idea of leadership in their working lives.

Outline of today's Session

1. Interactive workshop on the three main areas that junior lawyers can lead on
2. Discussion of this and any other concerns or challenges concerning leadership
3. General networking

This is what young lawyers have said about leadership training:

'Gave time for questions, sharing, discussing. Managed the different people in the group and got full participation. Takeaways to refer to, to reflect on and to refresh thinking later on.'

'Really helpful and learnt a great deal – thank you.'

'Excellent content and delivery'

'I will go away with new leadership strategies and methods'

'Helpful. Confidence building.'

Prior to this session, it would be helpful but not essential to read my blog
